So I think it does change the experience somewhat if you're not in the same room. And also, one of the members was having a... I can't remember her name, but she was having a lot of connectivity issues and I know that's something that we don't necessarily have a lot of control over, but I felt really badly because she kept going in and out of being able to hear us and for us to hear her. And it just must be so incredibly frustrating for people in a state that don't have reliable connectivity for programs like this.

Oh, I thought that the length, I wouldn't want it to be longer. Sometimes I wish that it was an hour, but there is certainly is a lot of material to cover in each session. And having the extra 1/2 half an hour, I think allowed us to be able to connect with each other on a personal level. So it's probably about the right amount of time.

I have found that, not necessarily with this group, but let's say that with other Zoom kinds of sessions like I, the difference between doing mindfulness groups that I've been in person ones versus Zoom, it seems like a really different experience to me that I feel like I'm able to get into a more reliable meditative state when it's in for whatever reason [chuckle] personal, in person group than it is on Zoom. So I think it does change the experience somewhat if you're not in the same room. When you're in a group, you can see everybody's faces instead of just the person that's talking and I think that adds it another dimension to the kinds of personal interactions.
